Mental Health Services for Students Remote Learning

The COVID-19 pandemic has further increased loneliness, stress, anxiety and depression among college and graduate school students; i.e., increased demand for services.

A mental health survey among 30,725 undergraduate students and 15,346 graduate/professional students from nine different institutions (the SERU Consortium) was answered from May to July. Depression and anxiety screened positive in 32-39% of students - figures significantly higher than the prior year.

iHope Network can help with your students in most of the US. This is especially relevant during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Campus closure and other initiatives may create continuity of care challenges, particularly for out-of-state (and country) students representing a sizable proportion of the student population.

iHope has been taking referrals from counseling centers prior to the pandemic. We are ready to help and have experienced clinical staff covering most of the country. To refer a student you can go to www.ihopenetwork.com or call our intake team at (800) 225-0634. They can check insurance, connect you or the student with a therapist and answer other questions.

If you would like to discuss further collaboration opportunities with iHope, or include iHope in your COVID-19 response strategy, please contact Tom Hunter, CEO at tom.hunter@ihopenetwork.com or call (781) 346-4461.
